

MAPPING A PARALLEL SOVEREIGNTY: DOCUMENTATION OF AHP–RBD MOBILISATION

(six-month dataset)

This document accompanies the main analytical article and serves as an evidentiary and descriptive record of the six-month mobilisation undertaken by the Antarrashtriya Hindu Parishad (AHP) and its affiliate, the Rashtriya Bajrang Dal (RBD), across multiple Indian states. It compiles documented instances of public meetings, rallies, weapon worship ceremonies, training camps, protests, and targeted interventions into community life, drawing primarily from verified video records, media reports, and publicly available documentation. The dataset spans a wide geographical range and captures both urban and rural mobilisations, reflecting the breadth and intensity of AHP–RBD’s organisational activity during the period under study.

Rather than treating each incident as an isolated episode, this document presents them as part of a sustained and patterned mobilisation strategy. The entries reveal recurring themes: the ritualisation of weapons and violence; the construction of Muslims and Christians as internal enemies; the regulation of gender, sexuality, and interfaith relationships; demographic fear-mongering; economic boycotts; and the assertion of extra-legal authority over religious practice, public space, and everyday social relations. Repeated across locations and time, these actions demonstrate organisational continuity, ideological coherence, and an effort to normalise vigilantism as a legitimate mode of civic engagement.

Of particular socio-legal significance is the recurrent presence or acquiescence of state authorities—especially the police—at events featuring inflammatory speeches, weapon displays, and calls for violence or social exclusion. Several entries document instances where AHP–RBD actors appear to exercise coercive power alongside or in place of formal legal authority, including raids, public “inspections,” moral policing, and the disruption of minority religious gatherings. These interactions underscore how vigilante mobilisation is enabled not only by ideological mobilisation but also by institutional abdication and selective enforcement of law.

This dataset is therefore not merely a listicle of hate incidents. It constitutes an empirical map of an emerging parallel moral and political order—one that operates within the shell of constitutional democracy while actively undermining its principles. Read alongside the main article, this document provides the granular empirical foundation for understanding how organised hate functions as infrastructure: replicable, routinised, and embedded in everyday public life. It is intended to support legal analysis, policy intervention, and scholarly inquiry into the transformation of communal mobilisation from sporadic violence into a sustained mode of governance.

At the Trishul Deeksha event organised by the Antarrashtriya Hindu Parishad, its President Pravin Togadia glorified the Babri Masjid demolition, calling it “an act of bravery,” and declared, “Until we started the Ram Mandir movement, only temples were demolished and mosques built over them. This was the first time we demolished that Babri structure and made a temple.” He warned, “To the dreamers of Ghazwa-e-Hind, remember — it is on your chest we built the Ram Mandir. That is just the start; Kashi and Mathura are waiting to be constructed on your chests.” <https://t.me/hindutvawatchin/3028>

Pravin Togadia, founder and president of AHP-Rashtriya Bajrang Dal, speaking at a meeting organised by Rashtriya Mahila Parishad and Ojaswini, claimed that “there can be no compromise with Islam,” calling any compromise a betrayal of God, deities, and sages. He alleged that Muslims demolished a Shiv temple in Mecca to build a mosque and spread their faith worldwide. He further questioned the academic and medical qualifications of Muslims, claiming that those in charge are “illiterate” and intend to kill Hindus.
